Biographical Note

Born in Warsaw, New York, Earl Brininstool (1870–1957) moved to Los Angeles in 1895. A newspaper reporter turned western Historian he collected books, artifacts, manuscripts, and vintage photographs, and contributed to the dialogue about the plains settlements of post civil war America. Through the early part of the twentieth century, he photographed survivors and places relevant to the westering of America. He also purchased vintage photographs of what he considered historically significant nineteenth–century people and places such as Native American subjects like Rain–in–the–Face, made about 1886 by David Barry and images by George Trager of the aftermath at Wounded Knee in 1891.

Scope and Content Note

The Earl Alonzo Brininstool Collection was acquired in 1967 from a private collector in Colorado. The Amon Carter Museum of American Art arranged with the University of Texas at Austin to purchase the manuscript portion of the collection and those items were shipped to Austin in March 1967. The Amon Carter retained photocopies of the manuscripts now housed in the Archives of the Amon Carter. 1822 objects, photographs and negatives, compromise the Amon Carter’s Brininstool Collection. The Amon Carter library has sixteen Brininstool publications.

Since 1967 select vintage photographs from this collection have been exhibited on a regular basis. Approximately 333 vintage images collected by Brininstool include nineteenth century albumen silver and gelatin silver photographs by mostly well known photographers. The photographs include Native American subjects, particularly those involved in the Battle of Little Big Horn such as Sitting Bull by David F. Barry, city views of Deadwood by John C. Grabill, and cowboys by George Kirkland.

The balance of the collection consists of 989 snapshot quality black and white images and 500 negatives made by Brininstool between 1913 and 1930s. Brininstool used his collections to illustrate his publications and although he is not a major figure in the historical lexicon he survives as an avid supporter of popular history through his publications. His documents serve as illustrations of places like Beecher Island, a Colorado monument, or the Wagon Box site in Wyoming. The photographs are also personal mementos of events such as Brininstool and his friends attending a battlefield monument dedication or views of the fifty–year reunion of the Battle of Little Big Horn made in 1926.

_Papers:_ This series includes the research and manuscripts accumulated by Earl Alonzo Brininstool. The majority of these materials are copies of originals held by the University of Texas at Austin, and are included to provide context to the photographic collection of the Amon Carter Museum of American Art.

_Acquisition and Research:_ This series includes supplementary research conducted by the Amon Carter on the themes and issues contained within Brininstool’s original collection. Further material discusses the 1967 split of the collection between the University of Texas and the Amon Carter.

_Photographic:_ This series consists of copy prints of originals in the Brininstool Collection made by the Amon Carter for reference use. These duplicate the larger body of original photography and provide easy access to fragile materials.

A more detailed series description appears at the start of each series in this finding aid.

Series I. Papers

Scope and Content Note: This series contains copies of materials either written by Brininstool or collected for his research. These items are mostly copies of those held by the University of Texas at Austin. The latter part of the series is heavily interspersed with research materials amassed by the Amon Carter which endeavor to integrate the Brininstool Collection into historical context and the larger museum holdings.
